AN INDEPENDENT WEEKLY JOURNAL OF LITERATURE,

EDUCATION,

POLITICS,

GENERAL NEWS.

and LOCAL INTERESTS.

It is generally acknowledged to be the equal of the best newspapers published and superior to most country papers. It is a matter of pride to those towns which it so ably and well represents. To sustain these assertions, it would be easy to give a large selection from opinions of its readers and patrons which constantly come to hand. But the paper will speak for itself. Subscription price, $2 a year or $1 for six months.

A HALLUCINATION.

My aunt and cousins were going to Brighton for several weeks, and had asked me down to see them. As I was not certain on which day they intended to leave London, I thought I should call at my uncle's house, in West End square, and inquire. When I rang the bell the door was opened by a tall woman respectfully dressed in gray. She did not look at all like a servant, and seemed between forty and fifty. Her features were good, but unattractive, and she was very pale, but her pale eyes were not unkindly. To my inquiry if Mrs. — was at home, she said: "No; they have all gone;" and before I had time to ask when they left, the door was shut. I knew that my uncle did not intend leaving town till the dissolution of Parliament, and that, when his family were from home, he generally stayed at the Palace Hotel, so I went in search of him. I found he was staying there, but was not in. Then I went to his club, but was unable to find him. I wished to know when I was expected at Brighton; but as I was aware that I should be welcomed at any time, my chief reason in looking for him was to find out who the strange woman was that was taking care of his house. As I could not get her face out of my head, I did not feel selfish, however, and the next day I left for Brighton. I took the earliest opportunity of asking my aunt in whose charge she had left her house. "There is no one in the house," she said; "it is locked up."

I then told her that I had gone to the house; and described the woman who had opened the door, adding that she was one of the strangest-looking women I had ever seen. My aunt said that I must be mistaken, as it was quite impossible there could be any one there. My cousins agreed with her, and told me, among other things, whether I had dined before going to the square. "I know what he has done," cried Amy, a smart child of eight—"he has rung the wrong bell." This theory appeared to receive general acceptance; but I was not to be done out of my belief in this manner, and stuck firmly to my original assertion. My favorite cousin, Annie, was the only one who took my part, and said that for all they knew, some one might have got into the house. "If any one had got into the house," said my Aunt, "it is quite evident that they would not open the door to any person who came to it."

"But," pleaded Annie, "if they were there for no harm!" "Nonsense," said one of her sisters; "it's a hallucination." At this they all laughed, and I joined them, though I was in no laughing mood. As Annie had taken my part, she did not desert me, but telegraphed to her papa to go to their house and ring the bell, knock at the door three times and say "Open sesame." When she told us her message, she added: "If there is any one in the house, they are certain to come for that," to which we all agreed. My uncle, who would do anything for his daughter, did as he was requested, and telegraphed back that all his efforts had made no impression on the door. I was then left alone. Annie sided with the rest in telling me I had made a mistake. I was unshaken, however, and the recollection of the strange appearance of the person who had opened the door made me feel very uncomfortable. I made some excuse to go up to town the next day, and determined to investigate the matter for myself. On arriving in London, I went at once to my uncle's house. I rang the bell, but no answer. I knocked, but all was still. I again rang furiously, and even kicked the door, but in vain. I began to think that I must, on the former occasion, have gone to the wrong door, and went out some distance from the house to look at it before leaving. The blinds were all down; but just as I made some excuse to go up to town the next day, and determined to investigate the matter for myself. On arriving in London, I went at once to my uncle's house.
